And sentence, unprecedented in Ditian in modern times, came after the tall, dark-haired Blake had pleaded guilty to five charges under the Official Secrets Act.

Blake was told by the Lord Chief Justice, Lord Parker: You case is one of the worst that can be envisaged in times of peace. Your conduct in many other countries would unstolutely arry the death penalty.

A Smile, Then He Turns

Blake, a married man, stood looking straight ahead as he heard Lord Parker's words.

The sentences came after the court had been in camera for 54 minutes. Public and Press had been excluded after Mr. Jeremy Hutchinson, Q.C., defending, said he had been told that much of what he would be saying in mitigation should not be said in public.

When the court reopened, torof Parker told Blake:

Your full written confession reveals that for some

"Moreover the information communicated, though not of, a scientific nature, was learly of the utmost importance to that Power and has rendered much of this country's efforts compitely useless."

Confession Stays Secret

Lord Parker said that ween one realised Blake was a British subject and was throughout the period employed by his country in a responsible position of trust, it was clear his action was akin to treason.
